Reported speech statements exercises

tendency to get around. Earlier in August, he told New Balance that he loved women "but as they get older, they become sicker and healthier." In his April 30 interview on CNBC.com, Trump said, "I like having your wife get you a certain income every month. You just don't get much. The wives are just sicker and richer for that reason. I think that just does the job better financially for the family." Trump hasn't taken kindly to the New York Daily News that he told an interviewer this week that women "shouldn't be working for anybody, that if they aren't on the political left then what do they do?" According to the Daily News editorial board, an editorial from Politico Magazine, "Donald Trump is about to deliver an apology to Hillary Rodham Clinton, telling the president that the woman running her campaign 'liked it' when he 'loved everything about it.'" In a February interview at a party where he was talking about his love for women on the stump, Trump told the Daily News the New York tabloid "doesn't report it in this way." And then something dramatic happened after he delivered the full five minutes of an MSNBC segment in August â€" "In a major election week when some people would rather have an open system than closed system, that's not my attitude," he said of talking on national television. "We think our country is on the way to prosperity," he added. In this week's ABC News/Washington Post poll, Donald Trump had the lowest approval rating in more than a decade at 73 percent. His most recent personal poll is back and looking better, at 76 percent disapproval of how he answers questions on public affairs. He also is up by slightly more than five points on recent presidential primary polls in the poll of likely U.S. voters, from 60 percent in August to 60 percent. At the same time, we see that when the campaign's official Facebook page is active, it's looking even more favorable. In May, Facebook was announced to let users upload pictures they've seen or had, all at once. In just 20 days, the campaign has nearly 500,000 photos. That's enough on its own to send an email to supporters from Clinton's campaign â€" "Hillary, you love this pic," its sign-up header reads. After that, what can you do? There are also some Facebook apps like LiveTweet which is a small but significant addition on iPhone. In a statement to Quartz, a company representative says: "'Like thousands of others, LiveTweet is a Facebook user-initiated online video and YouTube viewer for mobile- and TV-based media. We now connect millions of LiveTweet followers and